How To Retain Students Who Have Been Suspended: Personalized Initiatives To Get Them Back On Track

Wednesday, May 20 ~ 1:00-2:30pm (Eastern)

Once the live date has passed, this training will be available on demand.

Overview

In this interactive webinar, we will explore the characteristics of academically suspended students from a variety of different perspectives. We will discuss the challenges inherent to this population as well as how to overcome them and provide evidence-based best practices and strategies for getting these students back on track and retaining them to graduation. We will also explain the various roles that all members of the campus community can play in responding to the needs of suspended students. As well as examine successful programs and initiatives from across the nation that are currently used to effectively and cost-efficiently meet their needs – and how these programs and initiatives can be adapted to a variety of higher education environments. Equal emphasis will be placed on helping both individual students who have been suspended as well as institutions achieve their mutually-complementary objective: graduation and job placement.

Objectives:

- Review the general characteristics of college students who have been suspended, with an emphasis on their comprehensive needs
- Investigate the role of leadership in identifying and responding to the advising needs of college students who have been suspended
- Conduct a needs analysis to determine how well their institution is doing at identifying and responding to the advising needs of college students who have been suspended
- Assess and anticipate the evolving needs of college students who have been suspended, with respect to academic preparation, social integration, mental and emotional health considerations, and financial support
- Explore evidence-based best practices in coordinating comprehensive retention initiatives related to academic advising and other services for college students who have been suspended
- Examine mechanisms for keeping everyone at the institution on the same page with respect to meeting the needs of college students who have been suspended

Speaker(s)

"Retaining students who have been suspended really needs to be a top priority for colleges and universities. First, it's the right thing to do for the students involved; and second, it helps enrollments. We should never give up on students who have a rough start – or experience a rough patch – with respect to their college education. Academic advisors and other professionals can make a huge difference with these students – if they know how to proceed."
